

HYPERVERSE PLURIVALENCY

(A.K.A Hyperverse Riddle Plurivalency, Hyperverse Plurivalency, H9P or HRP)

A homebrew system for unusual campaigns.

Created (and manually translated) by Victor “Hesolyoko” Morais.

Based on concepts of the following systems: “YASP”, “Hunter’s Journal (Diário do Caçador)” and the ones by the “MamakiParty”*.

“You Awaken in a Strange Place”, or “YASP” is an intellectual property by Tummy Boy.

*“Hunter’s Journal (Diário do Caçador)” is an intellectual property by “Coisinha Verde”.

*The current homebrews are creations from the MamakiParty group: 2081, by Lucca “Ccalu” Lobo; “RuneWorld” by Pablo “Winter” Solano; [Name Pending] by Rafael “Dwarf” Miguez.

Basics

Initial Concepts

Hyp3rver5e 91823231522 Plur1v4lency is a RPG System with the goal of creating unique experiences in a flexible manner, by adapting to the different situations in the campaigns where it's used and being shaped by any ideas the participants can propose, where they're balanced by the system.

The "setting" of the campaign in which the author used the system to develop is one of interdimensional anomalies and esoteric inconceivable concepts, so, although H9P can be used in any kind of setting, with little to no restrictions, and it's even something that's encouraged, the more specific terms will be related to that specific setting so the ideas can be better organized, and campaign-specific elements will be added to promote inspiration and work as "logs" in the document for facilitated access.

Furthermore, H9P aims to make space for interactions in the "intramechanics"¹, "intermechanics"² e "extramechanics"³ levels.

1. Due to the capacity of the different elements of each proposed mechanic to be analyzed, adapted and/or shaped at the participants' wills.
2. Due to the capacity of not only the participants, but also the mechanics themselves to communicate with each other, in a fun, albeit non conventional way.
3. Expressed by the system's capacity to welcome possible external mechanics, as required by the context they could be inserted. This interactions build different layers, allowing for the exploration of unexpected strategies that can lead to surreal moments.

If this is your first time playing a tabletop RPG, first of all, thank you for the preference! I'm honored to be part of your first impression about tabletop RPGs and I'll do what I can to make it the best! If not, you can skip the more well known parts of this doc, they're already familiar ground to you and I still thank you for choosing H9P! That said, for there to be no comprehension issues when it's playtime, it is necessary to understand some concepts, such as the ones described in the "Definitions and Glossary" section.

Functionality

H9P was conceptualized with promoting creativity and customization in all possible levels in mind, therefore, as the stories are adapted, it's possible that the gameplay's general complexity becomes evident in most of its aspects, so, although not strictly required, it's recommended for players to have basic knowledge about the RPG genre when exploring this system (otherwise, if necessary, the "Definitions and Glossary" section could be of help, if so desired) so that later on these foundations can be shaken, twisted or even broken.

The 3 Game Modes

Branching out the nature of the products this system takes inspiration from, the main possible game modes that H9P proposes are: Solo, Cooperative e Face-Off (Competitive). Each mode has its kinks, but, since they're mostly quantitative, they will all be explained more in-depth in the "Game Modes" section.

Materials to Play

- Standard Set's All Multiple of 4 Dices: d4, d8, d12, d20, d100 (except for d6 e d10, these last ones being optional) or Dice Bot/App/Script in case the campaign is online.
- Character Sheet (available through annexed PDF).
- Pen, Pencil and Eraser in case of an in-person campaign or notepad (or similar) in case the campaign is online (Optional).
- Board, be it from another system or of your own creation (Optional).
- Friends (Optional).

- If desired, use A4 paper sheet or bigger to draw the map of the world (Optional).
- If desired, conceptualize your character in advance, to fit them into the system (Optional).
- A reasonable amount of pre-planned Challenges. (See “Challenges” subsection)
- For GMs Conceptualize world in advance. If desired, you can take inspiration from worlds of different media or use methods of other existent systems, or even build one from the ground up, this last option being slightly detailed on the following section.

World Creation

The World

The way a world and each of its peculiarities can be developed is something that is explored and consolidated according to its GMs will, whether it's going to have fantasy-heavy medieval battles or grimy noir criminal investigation stories with lots of puzzles, or even a sci-fi space opera focused on character development, each attribute, story and challenge that it's participants may face should be created in a way that every experience and consequence is interesting to all involved. It becomes your choice to either populate countries with different cultures or a space city with every kind of being, or even to create isolated events like a oneshot where all the characters are stuck inside a shut off laboratory and their goal is to escape, as long as you're ready to interpret each event that happened, happens and could happen during gameplay. If you want to have the best possible experience, allow yourself to think outside the box! Maximize immersion, expand concepts, create new docs, ideas, methods! Imagination (and the system's basic concepts) is the limit!

Topics

It is of common knowledge by now that there are no stories worth making if there is no content, no motivations to explore the world, or even the progression that makes the overcoming of the challenges satisfactory, therefore, it's expected that all of the events that are created to make the world more interesting do so in a harmonic way between ideas of the GM and of the player, and that both have some knowledge of it, however, it is also worth also recognizing the unpredictable nature of an RPG, expressed by the constant presence of random factors, in the form of the dice rolls. A more linear and preprogrammed way of storytelling, if applied in every single moment and aspect of a campaign, can make itself quite limited and, consequentially, predictable to all involved, making it a bit more dull and lowering the energy that such presented moments could give in a more organized, better campaign.

One of the best ways to, therefore, start constructing some of the narrative elements that will be explored, and keep, at the same time, said unpredictability aspect to all of its elements is to make use of topics. These summaries of the subjects or beings that are going to be approached during the sessions, when used, shrink the necessary amount of space used in the construction of ideas promoting a better implementing flow, besides not being required to be placed in a specific order, removing this linearity and making the timing of each use borderline impeccable, when well utilized.

Character Creation

Customization

The process of creating a character is primarily defined by each characteristic given to them by their player, and by the player's capacity to create a relatable being with whom it can enjoy the experience of immersing themselves into the game's world, specially when talking about its influences in said world and vice-versa, that being translated in the character's sheet where aspects like personality, hobbies, appearance, name, origin and even backstory tragedies can be described, if so desired, to bring a bit of authenticity in the whole concept proposed by the player, and the myriad of systems that exists nowadays allow for that process to be depicted and analyzed in several different ways, from the more traditional ones, which use elements such as defined classes, tightly-woven stories etc. to the more flexible ones, where even the probability of using improvise as sort of a mechanic is not null. That in mind, H9P aims to go through that second approach, with the goal of allowing the most unusual situations and characteristics of a story to happen and affect the players, one of its many examples being explained in the following subsection.

Basic Mechanics

- Links: Not quite a mechanic per se, as it is more of an axiom inside H9P where, basically, every main and changeable aspect of your character sheet is or can be attributed (or linked) to something, be it anything from an RP element to a mechanic, and it's up to the player to decide where to link them. For example: A character's properties are linked to their Essence, this one being able to be linked to either the character themselves, becoming an inherent aspect of them, or it could be linked to an item he possesses, and be subject to any and all consequences that happen to it, on that example, implying that he could die should the item be destroyed. It is recommended that the Essence be linked to the character, hehe. They will be better explained throughout all of the "Applying the Mechanics" section.
- Challenges: This mechanic is completely arranged by the participants, due to the fact of them involving external methods to the standard RPG concepts. To put it simply, a Challenge is an alternative to the dice rolls through the means of a minigame, begun when chosen by the player, defined by the GM or by overall party consensus. This minigame can be previously discussed, or proposed in the moment. Some examples of games that could be used as Challenges include: "Tic-Tac-Toe", "Word Unscramble", "Janken", "Codebreaking" etc. Although not necessary, it is recommended that the Challenges are thematically aligned to the character's or the story's context, for better immersion and, of course, if you don't want it, you can use "Dice Rolls" as your main Challenge. They will be better explained in the "Applying the Mechanics" section, under "Challenges".
- Essence: This one is the most important mechanic of your character, the main one. All characters created under this system have it and it is an inherent representation of your life in the game, and all characters start with only 1 Essence. Unlike the HP bars system, the Essence has only one aspect: Any damage to it will instantly destroy it and your character will die. For better visualization, take as reference a system of "lives" in a platformer game. When you die, you "lose a life". That's how Essence works. On top of that, it also works as the main Level indicator, starting at 1 and going up according to context or by acquired experience. Essence can be moved, removed, created, altered and even copied, but it will always be the main representation of a character. It will be better explained in the "Applying the Mechanics" section, under "Essence".
- Levels and Level Up: The "Level" of a character is attributed to their Essence, therefore, when you level up, new features can be unlocked. The "Level Up" mechanic consists in the improvement of Essence-related character aspects that have influence over things like Gear, Properties, Abilities etc in ways that match each proposed subsystem accordingly. The consequences of a Level Up will be described in each respective subsection and the ways that you can Level Up include (but are not limited to): Defeating a Boss, killing a set amount of enemies, realizing a great feat, total party consensus etc. They will be better explained in the "Applying the Mechanics" section, under "Progression".
- Properties: They are the main attributes of a character, responsible for defining their actions and what they are capable of. Also known as Stats in other RPG systems, they are classified as the following: Strength, Agility, Dexterity, Survival, Knowledge, Influence, Danger and a Custom one. They will be better explained in the "Applying the Mechanics" section, under "Properties".
- Gear: The Equipment, Apparel or Power that will accompany your character. Gear can be any kind of object that can be utilized or follow and affect your character directly. Each Gear can have up to 4 Abilities. They will be better explained in the "Applying the Mechanics" section, under "Gear".
- Composition Status (CS): This one can kinda be considered as the true "HP Bar" of the character, however, instead of being linked to the proper, the Composition Status is linked to the Gear, giving the character the possibility to have up to 8 CS bard. It will be better explained in the "Applying the Mechanics" section, under "Gear".
- Abilities: Those are the direct techniques that a Gear can use, and can be described as any kind of action, from attacks, movements, to buffs, debuffs and simple actions. They are defined and affected by their Gear's Type, which is represented by the selected Property. They are assigned through a D8. They will be better explained in the section "Applying the Mechanics", under "Abilities".
- Fortune: The player's luck, which is defined along the character's construction and it's responsible for creating events that are beyond the party's control that could either make the story easier or harder. It will be better explained in the "Fortune" subsection.

Value Assignment

When starting a new sheet, the following aspects are considered:

1. The character's level starts at 0.

2. They have no Gear.
3. All of the Properties start at 0.
4. Therefore, they have no Abilities.
5. The Essence Link is not defined.
6. Fortune starts at 0%.
7. The Ults spaces are not filled.
8. Inventory is empty.

And in that context, each character starts off by being conferred 1 Level.

In that first Level, 8 PRp (Property Points) are conferred to be distributed through each Property at will.

(In case the sheet is adapted from another system, a recreation or if required by context, the character can start in a different level that matches their power level).

Point Types

There are 3 Point Types, which are organized by manipulation order:

PRp (Property Points):

These Points are the most basic type and the most influential in the modification of your character's attributes, and are primarily obtained by leveling up (any other suggested methods are used at the GM's will)

$$\text{PRp Gain per Level} = 8 \text{ PRp} * \text{Level}$$

GRp (Gear Points):

These Points are directly related to Gear evolution, where they can be used to buff up CS Bar values. They can be acquired with any awarded PRp or at the GM's will and operate in a dependent manner to the PRp system, so:

$$\text{GRp Gain per Level} = \text{PRp} * \text{Level} * \text{Gear Amount}$$

ABp (Ability Points):

Lastly, Ability Points are the numbers that influence each Gear's abilities evolution, and are the last type of point awarded with GRp or at the GM's will and are composed by the following flow:

$$\text{ABp Gain per Level} = \text{GRp} * \text{Level} * \text{Active Slots Amount}/100$$

In this next section, the system's mechanics will be more detailed, deepening the more basic ones and describing more structural and contextual ones that help sustain them.

Fortune

Fortune is H9P's way to implement the "Luck" mechanic in the world, being based of a percentage system. To find out your characters luck level, roll a d100. The result its going to be defined as a threshold for your character to achieve "good luck", or in other words, its going to be their Fortune Cost.

With such threshold defined, the character's luck is set as the following:

Ex: The result of the roll was 50. Your character's Fortune is 50%.

Result	Consequence
1%	Complete Misery: Double failure (Round value of the second one to -10%. Second Failure consists in removing Current Fortune and rerolling Fortune Cost, subtracting 1/2 of the Current Fortune from this new roll. Implement Second Failure right after character's turn). Extremely damaging results and complete inconvenience. Imminent danger.

2%	Critical Failure: Really bad luck and inconvenient results. High chance of danger.
3%~49%	Common Failure: Varied negative results, from hard obstacles to completely insignificant events, should they all go against a character's luck.
50%	Neutral Result: Nothing happens.
51%~99%	Common Success: Varied positive results, from little events or objects to giant boons awarded to the character.
100%	Critical Success: The winds blow in favor of your character and it's awarded with near-divine blessings.
101%-143%	Ultrabenign Godsend: Completely divine advantages that allow the character to realize acts that are unknown to the realm of common.
144%	Supreme Hyperversal Fluke: Double success. (Round value of the Second Success to 150%. Second Success is to award the player with allowing them to do Meta-Gaming for the time equivalent to 1 turn). A glimpse of heaven, the character possess the skill to realize inconceivable actions and exercise influence over the very foundations of the dimensions where they exist.

To do a Fortune Check, when needed, roll all of the dice (d4, d8, d12, d20, d100) and add up the result.

Ults

The Ults, or "Ultimates", are the "final" techniques of your character, their strongest abilities and, therefore, the ones that have different aspects and conditions to normal Abilities or Items. They have a different meter, denominated "Drive", which points are accumulated whenever Challenges are completed, and on top of that, Ults dispose of direct hits, not needing any additional rolls or conditions to be activated. There are 3 types of Ults:

- Special Skill

Description	Cost
The best skill your character has related to any technique, independent of the situation. Perfect to be iconic.	Drive (= Level * 10) + 1 or more Full CS Bars (Explanation: As long as you have 1 Gear with a full CS Bar, you can use this Ult)

- Conflict Resolution

Description	Cost
Your character's strongest attack! The decisive strike to destroy your opponent in the strongest way possible! Use with caution, though.	Drive (= Level * 10) + 1d12 Abilities Blocked (0)*

*If the number of Abilities is lower than the result of the dice roll, just block all abilities.

- Miracle

Description	Cost
An Ult of immeasurable capacity, similar to the Supreme Hyperversal Fluke, however, with a countermeasure, a sacrifice must be made to meet such high costs.	The player renounces all their progress and falls back to level 1, with all of their initial stats, and their Essence becomes Exposed (All Gear is destroyed and the Property/Essence Link is torn).

Items and Inventory

Item creation for a campaign depends only on the content the GM wants to include, with complete freedom to define aspects, mechanics, effects and conditions to consolidate immersion and context in the gameplay. In this system, the items have all of the expected actions from RPG items, which include but are not limited to: Use, Discard, Destroy, Combine, Share... However, there is an extra action that this system proposes, with the intent of making item dynamics more interesting.

- Assimilate (or Equip): This option allows the item in the Inventory to transform into a new Gear, occupying an empty slot or transforming an already equipped Gear piece into an item and replacing it.

This mechanic allows the character to carry even more possibilities and browse through a bigger array of options and strategies to develop while he adventures alone, with friends (which would grow way more, exponentially even, those possibilities) or against them.

Applying the Mechanics

Toughness Indicator (TI)

The Toughness Indicator, or TI, serves as the main measure of the system's difficulty, being applied through a multiplication of different parts to define the found obstacle's level during the campaign's events. This mechanic is mostly used only by GMs to define the campaign's difficulty level, with the possibility of one constant difficulty being used during the whole experience, homogenizing the proposed hardships, or mixed together, to keep a sense of variety and unpredictability in the world, therefore, it is not necessary in a mode where story is not a requirement (l. e. Face-Off). Those indicators are:

- Lemon Squeezy (TI = 0.01)
- Very Easy (TI = 0.1)
- Easy (TI = 0.5)
- Normal (TI = 1)
- Hard (TI = 2)
- Very Hard (TI = 5)
- Abomination (TI = 10)
- Impossible Nightmare (TI = 100)

* This last one is recommended to only be used in cases where the party members should lose to advance the story.

To define the difficulty of a conflict or in any other necessary context, the following equation is used:

$$\text{Dif} = \frac{\text{Sum of all Levels in Party} * \text{TI}}{\text{Amount of Characters in Party}}$$

Challenges

The Challenges compose the "extramechanic" part of H9P, by allowing other types of game, besides Dice Roll, to be used as a parameter to define the result of an action. Some examples of Challenges include: "Tic-Tac-Toe", "Janken", "Charades" or even "Two Truths and a Lie". They will be used to determine the winner of a dispute with tests that could explore from skill to luck to even resistance in players.

To avoid diversions or dispersion of a game's flow, it is recommended that a time limit be implemented for each challenge. This system will use the following time restriction, however it can be altered at the party's will:

- 3:00 (3 Minutes) in or outside Conflict Turns.

(If desired, it's possible to implement different limits depending on the context).

Outside Conflict Turns: A challenge can be applied by performing an action instead of a roll, with not much restriction.

Inside Conflict Turns: A challenge is realized during a player's CAT, consuming it. In case it obtains success, the player can progress with his FAT, and they receive an amount of Drive (at the GM's will) to accumulate until it has enough to use the Ultis, and in the case they fail, they lose their FAT and it's the next player's turn. More information on "CAT" and "FAT" are present in the "Turns" section, under "Conflict Turns".

Progression

Your base roll is heavily linked to your level, because your dice evolves based on it, and that can be demonstrated in the following sequence:

Level	Dice Roll
1	d4
2	d8
3	d12
4	1d12 + 1d4
5	d20
6	2d20
7	3d20
8	4d20
9	5d20 = d100
10	6d20
11	7d20
12	8d20
13	9d20
14	10d20 = 2d100

And so on, in that pattern of a "5d20 = d100" basis, ad infinitum. There is no established upper cap in H9P. Other progression elements of this mechanic include:

- Property/Essence Link Tearing: Allow that, upon Gear Destruction, the Essence is able to take an extra hit, with their Properties disabled, but not destroying it. (Level 3 and Up)
- Multiexistence: Allows a character to have more than one Essence (pondering – do not use yet).
- Custom Types: Allow a Gear of a certain Type to have Abilities of multiple different Types. (pondering – do not use yet)
- More Time: Improve RAT, CAT or FAT along with the character's evolution (pondering – do not use yet).

Essence

The most relevant concept of all the sheet, the representation of all that makes the character. The Essence is the key to all other mechanics, because it represents a character's state of being and its capacity to realize actions. Only 1 Damage Point is enough to destroy it, regardless of the level. Gear, however, can serve as a kind of "protection" to it by, like the Properties, also being linked to it, with the "Composition Status" being similar to a proper "HP Bar". Any opposition, be it an Entity, Ally or NPC, can only cause damage to a character's Essence when all Gear is destroyed, by leaving it in an "Exposed" state. When a character's Essence is destroyed, their level falls to 0, and they die. It is speculated that negative levels could be utilized to subvert said death, but nothing is confirmed.

Regarding RP, Essence could be treated as something inherent to the character, such as their soul, body, will, or be represented by any objects, beings, places etc. being able to be moved or removed when necessary. It should be noted, though, that the cost to realize such actions is of 1 Level.

Properties

Properties are the direct reflections of your character's skills. They are divided in 8 different classes:

Property	Description
Strength	Property used in actions, objects or techniques that need physical effort or impact, mostly short distance Ex.: Melee attacks, lifting objects, destroying obstacles.
Agility	Property used in actions, objects or techniques that need quick thinking, sharp reflexes. Ex.: Evade, Parry, Jump, Slide.
Dexterity	Property used in actions, objects or techniques that need good motor coordination. Ex.: Ranged attacks, Handling complex objects or equipment, realizing accurate procedures.
Survival	Property used to represent the sense of survival of the character, and used in tests of your capacity to endure the hardships (Also known as Vigor) Ex.: Poison resist, Defense buff, Sanity buff, Impact resist).
Knowledge	Property used to represent the level of knowledge of a character when faced with challenges that require complex intellect. Ex.: Puzzle solving, World Knowledge, Mental insights, inventions, strategy, investigations.
Influence	Property used in situations where social skills are tested, for good or for evil. Ex.: Convince, Seduce, Intimidate, Lie, Befriend, Socialize.
Danger	Based of decision-making, specially in complex, risk taking situations. Based on the 5 F's*. Ex.: Analysis, Reaction, Impulse, Resolution.
Custom (ex.: Magic, Stealth, Pet)	Based on the player's creativity to make the Abilities grid bigger and more filled. Ex.: Cast spell, Steal, Tame, Cook. Created at the player's will.

*"Fight", "Flight", "Freeze", "Fk" e "Fawn". The "Fight or Flight response" expression originates from these terms.

They act as a Modifier Bonus in rolls where they are necessary. For example:

Let's consider a Level 3 character with Survival property Level = 6.

Their roll is the d12 plus their Survival Property Bonus.

Therefore, the roll to be done is: d12 + 6.

Property Manipulation and Block: The Properties, under certain conditions, or if affected by certain effects or attacks, could suffer Blocks, as Gear and Abilities do, during the time established by either the player responsible for the block or the GM. On top of that, the Properties table has the quirk of being highly manipulable. If desired, a character can destroy properties to accumulate their points into the more important ones, with the only disadvantage of it being impossible to recover them through common methods. When destroyed, the points' course is defined at the GM's will, who can decide if they are reorganized into the remaining Properties or if they are also destroyed.

Gear

Gear is any object, technique, being, attribute, linked to the Essence that allows the character to realize actions, they have specific Abilities specific to each one, types, "life bars", can be "removable" or "non-removable" (at the player's will) and can be destroyed.

Gear Types: The Types of a Gear are directly linked to the Property it's built on. For example: If a player invests in Strength, and wants to create a Battle Axe of the "Strength Type", this Type will be attributed to the Axe and its Abilities, and the rolls to use that Gear will be related to the Strength property.

Modifier Bonus: By investing GRp in a Gear, you upgrade its related Modifier Bonus, and said bonus can influence common uses as well as abilities affected by it.

CS Bar: The equivalent of a Gear's "Life Bar". With the maximum amount of Gear, a character can have up to 8 CS Bars. When above 0, the character can dispose of its respective Gear and its Abilities, however, if it drops to 0, it enters an "Unusable" state. For characters, the Maximum CS value for a Gear is defined by the following equation: CS = (Level's Dice + 2*(Type Modifier Bonus)) * Amount of Active Abilities

Unusable: In that state, the Gear and any Abilities related to it are blocked (Ø) until something is done to recover the CS. If an Unusable Gear takes any damage, even 1 point, it enters Destroyed state.

Destroyed: If a Gear is destroyed, it is permanently lost. Even if recreated, it will start at Level 1.

Abilities

Abilities are elements of the system that are responsible for realizing specific actions, or "skills" that a player needs to use in the required context.

The value assignment for that element in character creation works as follows: Each Ability has the same Modifier Bonus of the Type of its proper Gear, multiplied by the number of Active Abilities in such, and when established, the player can choose to roll a d8 for each one, or 4d8 in total, to decide the amount of the "Aider Boost" that's going to be given and applied over the Modifier Bonus. This possible aids consist in percentual additional amounts to the roll to give advantages (or disadvantages) to them, with the risk, however, of losing the ability in case a Critical Failure is rolled. The values are shown as follows:

Roll	Aider Boost
1	Ability Destruction
2	-50%
3-4	-25%
5-6	25%
7-8	50%

Turns

RP Actions (Outside Conflict)

RP Actions are realized in moments where the characters are not in Conflict Turns, therefore, doesn't have elements like initiative, attacks, and are only meant to help players to advance in the story. If there are any events that need rolls, they are activated, played and concluded normally. This is your time to practice your acting skills and connect with the character and the world around them! Time and progression are completely flexible in this state and events happen at the GM's will, like a story being told! Good luck!

Conflict Turns

Conflict Turns, on the other hand, have a set structure in their pacing. They normally occur when character meet a Hostile Entity, and have the following characteristics.

All participants, NPCs or PCs, possess only 1 RAt, 1 CAte and can gain up to 1 FAt.

Initiative: When facing a Hostile Entity, the initiative can be decided by a roll of a Property, or by a Challenge. The method can be chosen by the GM.

RAt: The Readiness for Action Time, or RAt, is the first time to be used in a character or Entity's action, except for offensive actions, in which case it will automatically skip their RAt and also consume their CAte.

CAt: The Conflict Action Time, or CAt, is the possibility that a character has to make an offensive against the opposition. This offensive action must be succeeded by a roll or a Challenge, if the opposition fails the Challenge, the attacking player or NPC is rewarded with a FAt, otherwise, the defending player or NPC are rewarded with a RSt.

FAt: The Free Action Time or FAt, is an immediate reward given to the winner of a Challenge, where they are benefited with an extra turn to make any action, be it for preparing or for conflict. (After any action in this time, the player's turn is over, regardless of result).

RSt: The Response Time, or RSt, is a way to counter an offensive action outside of your turn in initiative, gifted by concluding the challenge that is proposed by the attacking party.

Game Modes

Solo

This mode is recommended for those who want to become the heroes of their own stories! In it you will use the information as a GM, to create the most interesting world you can for exploring, as well as a player, to defeat the enemies in the most awesome way possible! Its aspects will be explained in the form of the "Transcendent Conspiracy" campaign. If you want to make things even more interesting when facing conflicts or when interacting with Entities (Hostile or not), try to use the following strategy:

Obscurity: After creating the enemy, filling the Property and Gears spaces, try leaving the association of each one and their respective Abilities for when you're in Conflict, through a d8 dice roll. This can make things more unpredictable and allows for a certain level of mystery, strategy or even adrenaline in the story's atmosphere by leaving stuff more hidden.

With this, this mode has enough material to start! I hope you have a good time when exploring the Hyperverse alone, and conquering the challenges to get a nice ending, triumph by coming out on top or having the ultimate insight, to always have a good story to tell and the courage to become the master of the game!

Cooperative

This mode is appropriate for when you want to gather your friends and have fun with many stories and adventures using every type of strategy, acting and socializing! It is the standard mode for campaigns and allows multiple different forms for promoting storytelling, interaction, critical thinking against hardships and problem solving, all with teamwork! There's no upper limit for the number of friends you can have, but the recommended amount of players in a multiplayer campaign is of around 3-5 players. Some of the things you can experiment with more than one person are:

Combinations: Interact with your allies and switch Gear or even Essence to create every flavor of unexpected situations!

Challenge Help: Depending on the Challenge, more allies can help your character so that all can have an advantage over the hardship they face!

Worldbuilding Expansion: The more minds working, the merrier the story! The bigger amount of people can make the world become even more alive and with even better potential plot points to be approached!

And with that, this mode has more than enough to start building amazing tales! I hope the team has a great journey throughout the Hyperverse, facing every type of danger and triumphing over them all! Show them your skills as partners, teams, or even family to create your party's best moments!

Face-Off (Competitive)

This game mode, compared to the other ones, is slightly different, for it has a slight variation regarding interaction between characters, represented through the following facts:

- The GM is not necessary in this mode*.
- Characters are not allies, but opponents.
- A story is not necessary (unless desired so)*.

H9P's competitive mode, "Face-Off", can be considered something of a "Versus Mode" of an RPG, where players choose their characters and put them against each other to find out who would be the winner, therefore, there are some differences in the game's structure.

There are only Conflict Turns: All of the characters dynamics would be based on fighting, therefore, RP is not necessary, and also for the fact of there not being a clear progression.

A minimum of 2 players is needed: There is no 1 person fight, but there is also no upper cap, so there can be frays between 3, 4, 5... 10... How many characters want to participate.

Initiative: To define initiative, the following process is done:

1. First, the average of levels of the party is taken (Sum of Levels/Number of Party Characters).
2. That done, the resulting number is used to define the level of the dice roll which will define initiative.
3. That done, all players roll the dice with the resulting level.
4. Lastly, the rolls are compared, and the player with the highest number has the opportunity strike.

Let's do an example for demonstration: We have 3 characters - Azeban, Bonga and Makro. Azeban is level 10, Bonga is level 2, e Makro is level 6. With that info, the following calculation is done:

$$(10 + 2 + 6)/3 = 18/3 = \underline{6}$$

After getting the result, one of the players search the table (or calculate if it's out of bounds) and gets:

Level 6 = 3d20

With that, all the players roll a 3d20. With that roll done, the players see the results:

Azeban rolls a 14, a 9, and a 20.

Bonga rolls a 4, an 8, and a 19.

Makro rolls a 1, a 12, and a 17.

So, with all the results, they add up each number (14 + 9 + 20; 4 + 8 + 19; 1 + 12 + 17), and get the following numbers:

Azeban got a 43.

Bonga got a 31.

Makro got a 30.

With these results, conflict initiative is formed: Azeban goes first, Bonga goes next and Makro goes last. And then they can start battling.

Tournaments or Competitions: Although not necessary, it is possible to create a conflict-based campaign between characters, with some examples and/or recommendations of setting being tournaments, bets, competitions or related. Imagination can run as free as it can pack a punch.

With that, this mode has enough material to start amazing battles between former friends, now enemies, or places to find out who's the strongest, or even creating a super tournament with your friends lore on the line! I hope everyone has fun tearing each other apart and destroying their friendships for one night and setting once and for all in the Hyperverse and all Canons who has the right to brag to have the most overpowered character!

TRANSCENDENT CONSPIRACY

Prologue

The story begins in the year of 2004 (considering though that in this world, the “Symmetry454” calendar system was adopted as the world’s main calendar) in a city called Compelvista, from the Loftanima country, a prudish city where the days go by without many events aside from your typical day off or holiday period, people have a normal, stable living with each other and criminal statistics are relatively low. Despite all that, though, there are really rare occurrences where people allegedly witness uncommon events, labeled by those as “mysterious, intriguing, even supernatural”... And with the word of mouth that passes, those events are now called “anomalies”. Even with few cases of anomalies happening during the city’s history, when one is discovered, the info travels fast and soon it becomes a big point of interest, however, its hard (although not impossible) for an anomaly’s notoriety to spread beyond the borders of their local communities, due to the persisting disbelief of the inhabitants in the mystical, quickly turning it into a rumor.

Said rumors can attract enthusiasts with the most diverse reasons, from the most distinct backgrounds, but until recently there are no concrete proof of any of the occurrences they seek, leaving their credibility up to constant debate. As one of said enthusiasts, [GM’s Character], after years of nurturing an uncommon familiarity with these topics, decided to take their project to new heights, beyond their house (chosen for this campaign as an apartment in block 3B of the “Shady Leaves” condo, the third out of 4 blocks with 3 buildings each) and beyond the personal context of their life.

Depending on each mode, the story can progress as follows:

Solo: By gathering more intel in online communities and forums, and building a small headquarter on the side of his home, the character dwells completely in their studies about a specific creature, making it their main target, their “Moby Dick” to be found and captured (you can choose between the ones listed, create one or decide randomly), and so, begins their investigation process. The journey that awaits them could change their life completely, for better or for worse. Your destiny is in your hands.

Coop: They search for people with similar interests in said communities and forums on the subject, and with that, assembles the most unique group of individuals they could find for their new ~~clubhouse~~ hangout professional association for the capture and research of anomalies, and its up to the party to decide how to begin in their first mission. Together, it’s possible not only to gather evidence and know more about the cryptids, but also to plan better and manage resources and effort to reach their goal. More minds work better than one.

Face-Off: The character discovers the online forums and communities are hosting a “most concrete evidence” contest, and becomes extremely motivated to become the one who could finally remove the veil over Loftanima’s eyes regarding the anomalies. They then subscribe and disclose their goal to obtain the shiniest, most concrete proof of their main target, their “Moby Dick” to be found and captured (you can choose between the ones listed, create one or decide randomly), however, the competition will not be easy, as many others crave the same, and as them, will use everything they have to achieve it. All is fair in facing the unknown, and the others who also might be looking for it.

Places

Explored Timelines: Main, Post Fifth Globe War (List them and create Timeline Label in the Visual 211641205)

- Block 3B’s Adjacent Warehouse Basement

The starting point of the campaign and the head office of your party. In it, the main events that start the participants’ journey will take place. The place has a stable appearance but it’s on a slightly bad shape, with some corners ridden with mold and furniture just thrown all over the place, some being old chairs and tables with “vintage” computers on the side walls and a center table. It resembles an official meeting room, but it's as kept as an old storeroom. In those walls, many evidence panels with intel on the chosen cryptids highlight the claustrophobic atmosphere even more, with few spots that are not written on. On the right side, in an adjacent room, there is the equivalent of a kit-net of around 173 square feet, where all supplies are kept and distributed between the group. On the left corner of the center meeting room there is a door with a staircase which leads to the upper part of the installment, a warehouse of around 270 square feet made of galvanized square steel where all of the old security equipment was stored, kept in a relatively old state, with little maintenance. It is also possible to find some trash bags from other residents who believed the place to be some kind of recycling station.

- “Shady Leaves” Condominium

A standard condo with a Googie aesthetic, localized on the Outskirts of Compelvista and composed of 4 7-level building blocks, each block with 3 buildings each. It uses the number-letter system (i.e. the first building of the first block is known as 1A, the second, as 1B...) and it has no documented occurrences of anomalies in or around its borders. The local day-to-day is quite peaceful, with the occasional isolated crime incident here and there, however, many alleged witnesses to anomalous events currently do live there, giving the party an ample scope for their investigation and resource searches. Besides the residences themselves, there are common spaces for the people of the condo, such as kiosks, pools, gyms, party and game rooms and administration offices. It is surrounded by 16 feet high walls and is localized just beyond the borders of the city itself, by taking the first right on the M-01 (Multiterritory 01). Not accounting for Compelvista, the closest establishment to the place is the Golden Oasis Shopping Center, located 2.4 miles away from the condo. Most of the landscape around it is composed of meadow-like hills with lake Flopper localized at 0.6 miles from Shady Leaves.

- The Infinite Reflection

Although the true nature of this space is unknown, with the only piece of information about it relating to its connections and possible composition being based of the Foundational Space, the Infinite Reflection has a certain level of utility for those who come across it, by serving as a linking and transition area between universes. As it's overlapping the concepts of existence and non-existence, it does not have a defined physical form, remaining eternally in a state of constant quantum superposition, and always susceptible to the observer effect of all who step there. The Infinite Reflection gained its name through the spreading of rumors after a student group, who alleges being part of a “neighboring universe”, experienced first contact and reported finding in their “expedition” 3 pieces of wood, appearing to be parts of a sign (the 4th piece was never found) which had inscribed on them the words “Oändlig (Infinite)”, “Riphleksa (Reflect)” e “Almashahid (Spectator)”. After the incident, considered by many to be its initial point, many other reports appeared more frequently on the web, elevating the popularity of the event on the forums to rarely seen levels of fame, reaching eyes and ears of people overseas. As time passed, though, the reports started to sound more similar to each other, contradicting the nature of the space and ultimately destroying its rumors' credibility. Currently, the place is described by witnesses as an “infinitely spacious area, with no apparent ceiling or ground, in a perpetual grayish atmosphere, with vertically oriented stone towers that extend to beyond the humanly comprehensible, disposed in an array-like order and windows spread throughout its extension, placed diagonally apart of each other. These towers are called “Existence Conduits”. The reason why this appearance hasn't changed until the current times could not be determined, with theories involving the identity of a possible external observer being the closest to what could be considered an explanation for the phenomenon and, therefore, the more prevalent ones.

- Existence Conduits (Doors to the Multiverse)

Being the physical representation of the constants that rule the alignment of each one of the infinite world possibilities, the Existence Conduits currently have the form of towers of infinite extension, in both directions of the vertical axis, composed of an unknown material, which has similar properties to concrete stones and a rundown appearance. On their walls, many sliding windows are arranged, where when the interior is observed, it is possible to see the dimension connected to its respective part of the conduit on the other side. When they're open, however, the individual can see the interior of the tower instead, hollow on the inside and completely devoid of any other windows except for the one that's open, and with a spiral shaped staircase extended throughout the place's unending length. The composition material of the walls on the interior vary with each target dimension. When entering the conduit and going up or down the stairs, it is speculated that the place starts distorting the further you go, and it gradually acquires anomalous properties, such as non-euclidian manipulation of space, temporal dilation and significant changes of perception of the individual, until they arrive on the destination dimension.

- Compelvista Outskirts

The outermost parts of the city consists of a typical suburban landscape around a metropolitan, more populated center, with some distant houses and stores and a more horizontal formation with fewer buildings. This landscape, besides being pierced by the many roads that connect the city to its neighboring territories, is full of meadows and some lakes, with some instances of forests and rivers or deserts being more rarely occurring and, consequentially, becoming attractions in and on themselves. Most houses on the city are inhabited by families, but the number of abandoned houses scattered throughout the territory is also not small. Despite that, there hasn't been any reports of anomalies in years, making the sleuthing potential as ample as the size of the space that could be explored. The resources that can be acquired in those areas are cheaper, but are sold in smaller quantities and with a higher probability to be homemade, makeshift or arts related than those made in the big city. The roadside establishments have a higher focus on attracting customers, resulting in more daring aesthetic choices, with some restaurants and hostels being able to light up parts of the road that would otherwise be pitch black. There are rumors that some of said establishments utilize anomalies as a business strategy, but nothing aside from the ol' hearsay, nothing solid was ever confirmed.

- Compelvista

The Quaint City of Daily Life, capital of the state of Vigor Tops, Compelvista has everything you could ask for in a relatively big city, with her commercial centers, residential areas, typical shows and attractions like shopping centers, monuments, parks and institutions for every context of life like schools, colleges, hospitals, corporations, whatever you need! It's divided into 4 main sections based on the four cardinal directions (North, South, West and East), and on it's center resides the mark of the city, the House of the Four Winds, where the City Hall is located. The House of the Four Winds has a huge reputation as a tourist attraction due to the artistic landmark of its architecture, which adds to its symbolic meaning as the main orientation methods in the city. It is composed of a symmetrically displayed manor in all of its 4 fronts, and around it, two arches are put in a cross-like formation, both meeting in the point directly above the manor. On the middle point of each semiarch 4 statues are placed, each one representing the 4 Anemoi (The 4 Fermian Gods of Wind: Boreas, Notus, Eurus and Zephyrus, respectively) and each pointing to their respective directions. Its main holiday is commemorated on February 33rd, marked by the foundation of the city by the then mayor Keligann Compelius-Winder, in 1738. It is a primarily industrial city, with an agricultural second lead, its main basic products being bovine meat, meadow flowers, wheat, subtropical fruits, chocolate, sulfur, silicon, carbon, gold, diamond and quartz substrates. Its main educational institute, the CUC, was responsible for spearheading the research of piezoelectric properties on ores, increasing the education level on the city and also it's social status for the country.

Due to aspects such as these, the economy of the city finds itself in good perspective, with promises of improvement and infrastructural expansions, resulting in a more active environment, constant and productive, having now a higher focus on acquiring a better cultural perception of the place and elevating even more it's importance for the world. Being a more populated space and quite compact, the perception of anomalies is even more muffled, with the very few ones actually registered being of considerably smaller scope, although with a (very) slightly higher frequency, therefore, the skepticism of the inhabitants is highlighted even more, and even anomalies with big impacts could face a bit of difficulty being brought up to light. On the other side, the big influx of information that's generated by the sheer quantity of individuals, added to the quickness and availability of it due to the way the city's organized, could be a big point in favor of those who would like to investigate these matters.

- Foundational Space (Exterior)

If little is known about the Infinite Reflection, even less is known about the Foundational Space, even with its considerable popularity, recognized by practically all of the conspiracy communities and even beyond, managing to reach mainstream levels as one of the least solvable mysteries of the world. There are people who relate it with some kind of afterlife, others speculate it being related to the true structural element of the universe, and those who could reach it could uncover its secrets, others yet, with a kind of hyper-reality inaccessible for common beings. Concepts varying from the Apéiron, Heaven, Hell, Beginning and End, Conscience, and even Magic could be related to this space. The truth about it is that it is an infinitely huge void, of inconceivable size, even beyond what could be considered "infinite", serving as the cradle for the concept of existence and non-existence themselves, and also where the Ontological Sources reside. The only way to create some form of contact with it, and exist inside of it is to die inside of the Infinite Reflection and, because of that, it is impossible to truly "die" in this space, the character only restarting its conscience in a random place if it happens. It is possible to reach negative levels in this space, which also are the key to entering the Nexus.

- Foundational Space (Nexus)

The final area of the campaign, currently inaccessible and completely unknown by everyone, it is where the very basis of everything that's conceivable and inconceivable resides. The ontological core of this world, and in it, what's subjective and objective intertwine in an incomprehensible fractalic dance, its reverberations shaping everything that is known throughout all of the multiverse, with one of its main manifestations, [Entity With a Name That Is Composed of 5 Random Letters] being the nth iteration of it's physical representations. Currently in a corrupted state, this entity is the one responsible for the decay of the Infinite Reflection, and the exponentially increasing destabilization of the Foundational Space itself. It is unknown if it is possible to keep your sense of "ego" when inside of this place, with a high risk of an individual of being absorbed if an entrance is ever attempted. The chances of a manifestation of the Nexus to be found in the Foundational Space are so extremely low that something of the kind happening should be considered a "slip up" in its formation, or even a miracle. Discussions could be generated, if ever discovered, about if the place could be considered something "alive" or not, but that would open up to so many others, it could distort the current philosophical concepts we adopt.

NPCs

These characters are not members of the main character party and serve to help filling the world and advancing the story, according to their importance to it. They're sorted as the following types:

Entities

- Compelvista Citizen or Normal Person

This entity is a generic template for every person that resides in the context of the campaign, be it in the Outskirts of Compelvista, people living in the city, or outside of it, this sheet can be used to build the secondary aspects of the story, such as exposition characters or partners. A deeper development of personality or backstories are not needed (good luck if you want it, though).

- Ontological Sources

The Ontological Sources are beings that exist in the Foundational Space and are the ones responsible for the composition of all elements, from physical to spiritual. They have no form, with their most approximately concrete manifestation being of luminous amorphous dots. Being capable of project an ultraprimitive form of conscience, they can help or hinder the character's journeys with its ability to manifest matter or energy out of the void. They are indirect results, or byproducts, or the reverberations caused by the Nexus' existence, and its residing entities.

- Space-Connecting Radio Receiver

This anomaly is shaped like a IC-R9500 model professional communication receiver, in good state and no visible modifications, with the exception of a small hatch on the top of the device, where a pair of VHF 3-banded rabbit-ear type antennas (commonly found attached to analog CRT TVs) can be found. A few centimeters to the right of this hatch, torn pieces of white tape is glued as some kind of label, the other parts never being located. On the visible pieces, the term "U se Att r" can be read. Some speculate the nature of that tape as some kind of instruction, others as a code, and the most accepted theory for the meaning of the letters is that it represents the term "Unseen Attractor". It has all the functions of a common radio receiver, the way it was discovered by a resident of a house close to Flopper Lake was unusual, as it was catching frequencies of THF level (on this instance, it was estimated to be around 24.960 GHz) and unknown source. The resulting waves were curiously a hybrid of the radiation waves usually found in spectroscopy procedures and an (according to the witnesses) journalistic-themed transmission by an unidentified station autodenominated "Oddytengis QM". - Marcela Kapu

Marcela Kapu is the name of the entity formed by the conscience of a post-graduate scientist on the field of Molecular Biology of the CUC, 25 years-old, who, after a contact event with an anomaly that has the form of a StorePUDisk, 128 GB, USB 1.0 port Flash Drive, which Marcela initially thought to be a common item acquired online, was copied and transferred to the device, filling up all of its storage, and giving her the ability to project it through communication means with USB support. Through non divulged ways, working together and looking for a way to exploit the new situation, Marcela managed to manifest her original conscience and body in the alleged virtual "dimensions", where she found out she could manipulate the world around her in distinct surreal ways, although restricted to those types of reality. Some feats she made include infinite replication, universal transfer (one of which helped her turn the anomalous Flash Drive into an indestructible object) and the ability to divide and branch out her consciences into new variants, one of which would eventually transform into the program known as "Guidance_Bob.exe". Currently, the only real world instance of Marcela consists in a video that is stored on a Komichi SP-Y250 model projector, located in the Internal Library's lost and found section. Due to the consequential absence of any type of register about Marcela on the institution, her existence was quickly discredited, making her a kind of urban legend by its students.

- Guidance_Bob.exe

The program named "Guidance_Bob.exe" is the name of one of the byproducts of Marcela's consciences' successive branchings, which after dissociating of its status of "reflection" of the scientist's mind, developed one of its own, and started to operate independently, with the goal of expanding its knowledge and helping her journey. Currently residing in one of the computers in the room where the original conscience currently resides, Guidance_Bob.exe can be executed mainly in ManicSys' Tunnels operating systems and it has open source versions for Doorix devices. It appears to be 714 MB in size, and when interacting with its app icon, it opens in a custom shell, similarly to an 80s personal computer, where the user is faced with an ASCII art of its name, and a prompt to type. It has no known limits for characters or lines. "Bob" can manifest himself as varied types of ASCII arts, with his main one (considered his identity, according to himself) being of an adult human male with a casual beach clothing.

- Marumargpagrinforslebjitza

Alleging being created by the Italian children entertainment company named "Mano Della Luna" (no registry found in any database of this reality), Marumargpagrinforslebjitza is an entity formed by a sentient violet-colored plushie toy and approximate dimensions of 14x9x6in. It has the appearance of an animal of bovine nature, with some uncommon body modifications, which include: 3 pairs of lagomorphic-like ears in its head, arranged in a manner similar to an axolotl; Hoofs on its hind legs, but hand-like paws on its front limbs. Each paw has a zipper attached in a horizontal pattern on its palm and, lastly, a similar, also horizontally placed but with bigger stature, on its torso. Interviews by Kapu aided in the comprehension of its nature and peculiarities by giving the following information: The creature claims to be from a line of toys called "Sogno Borses (Dream Bags)", created with the goal of capturing and filtering dreams with its vertical zipper bags to better sleep quality, and also keep a common plush appeal to improve humor; The creature appeared to present defects in its creation, being subsequently discarded from the line, and having a random id created by an employee for reprocessing and rebuilding, however, in an undisclosed manner, the entity managed to exit its assembly facility; The space inside the creature is relatively unknown, with the little available info of it being related to the interior of its soul and it having a contradictorily endless size. It has a lazy, but cooperative, personality.

- Mount Fellowfaller

Mount Fellowfaller, located at 12.5mi from Flopper Lake, on the borderline between Tree Canopies Forest and Grandit desert, has 6.2mi in diameter and it's 3.1mi high. From the outside, it doesn't show any anomalous characteristics, being considered by many as a hiking attraction and a big point for tourism. The real manifestation of its anomaly consists in its constantly shifting interior caves every new visit, which significantly increases the danger of exploring the place and would eventually give it its infamous nickname of the "Living Mountain". Due to an average of 5 missing people per year, climbing the mountain is a normal activity, but entry became strictly forbidden. Also, although not discovered yet, the mount does have a conscience, developed by the constant nourishment of what is believed to be the spirit Tuid'emu, guardian of the mounts of the religious belief of the inhabitants of the indigenous society known as Tu'ema Kerio'a, which reside within the mountain since before before the spirit's creation, 10,050 years ago. Due to the constant introduction of people to the society, it adapted itself, becoming stable and selfsufficient without the need to venture outside of it, and consequently making it inaccessible to unauthorized people. Not all who enter manage to get into the society, and due to the increase of snake-oil type grifters who claim to be authorized people, the legend fell to extreme scrutiny, ultimately restricting its access. The conscience of Tuid'emu/Fellowfaller is divided between the society's inhabitants, and currently possesses the body of the First Lavho'o (the leader of the people and the first Tu'ema Kerio'a person, gaining immortality after inheriting its physical form).

- The Telescope That Beholds the HD 861232 Object (The "Wanderer")

This entity consists of an Astrovisionary model, retractile pocket monocular telescope with dimensions of 9.8x11.8in, and an unknown asymptotic setting that allows for an apparently infinite zoom. In 1994, hobbyist astronomer Victor Oliver West discovered with the tool a strange object, a celestial body later identified as an asteroid with approximately 373 miles in diameter and a perfectly spherical shape, which, regardless of the direction where the scientist pointed the telescope, always remained perfectly centered. By researching with material given by the Laniakea Observatory personnel, from the North District, he found an asteroid with the same descriptions in the center of the biggest astronomical void of this universe: The Gloövs Void, and, flabbergasted, tried to study the movement of the body, later figuring out that, in actuality, this movement was aligned with the telescope's field of vision, always following, and always in its center. Believing to be suffering hallucinations, West tried to clean the tool, thinking he could maybe be reading the data wrong, and the dot was some kind of smudge, and accidentally discovered the setting, and becoming interesting in what it could do and, specially, what relation it had with the object. The setting consists of using the fingers directly on the lens and dragging in a zoom movement, like a smartphone and, after doing this, West disappeared, along with the telescope. In truth he was teleported to The Wanderer (the name he gave to the body before his disappearance) and its whereabouts were traced through uncommon pathways ever since, with its last seen spot being close to Saturn's third moon, Ganymede. Since then, West's whereabouts are unknown, and, if ever found, he will be dead, due to unknown causes.

- Babelian Ghoti (Calamopleurus babel)

This species of fish is speculated to live in places like the bottom of the Oceansap River and its delta, that flows into the Hundred Waves Coast, south of Loftanima. The Calamopleurus babel, known commonly as the Babelian Ghoti, is an entity that consists of an evolutionary branch of the now extinct Calamopleurus cylindricus, with its main differences being its considerably smaller size, with a length average between 19.5 e 31.5in, its golden coloration with whitish accents and its anomalous property, that comes in 2 parts: The first is its ability to distort and scramble all kinds of communication means or media of any type in a radius of approximately 656ft, and the second is, upon consumption of its meat, an unknown kind of blessing to your capacity of communication of a specific type, either a language, a media type or a code system for as long as the nutrients are being absorbed into the consumer's body, said nutrients being "recorded" by the memory cells of the body, and being reactivated upon more consumption of the fish's meat. The original name of the entity was supposed to be spelled as "Babelian Fish", however, when documenting the term, it always changed inexplicably to the word "Ghoti", so, enraged with the constant happenings, reporters just adopted the term, which ended up becoming the official name for the creature on the online forums. (Caution is really necessary when approaching these animals, for their mimic species, the "Fake Abraxan Ghoti", has very similar features and hard to notice differences and a 1 in 5 Babelians chance to be encountered in the river bottom and other real life locations, with this chance being mirrored, 5 to 1, when found throughout the Infinite Reflection).

- The 4 Figurines (Black Dragon, White Dragon, Raccoon and Fox)

These entities are described as 4 porcelain statuettes, each one measuring 3.5in of height and 2in diameter, decorated with 4 different creatures, with an anomalous property for each one. The method and material used in the crafting of the objects indicate a religious design, however the religion itself or its specifics is unknown.

Black Dragon: This statuette presents a black-colored dragon with blue dots that give it a celestial appearance, hugging a star. When acquired by an individual, its anomalous property is bestowed, giving one the abilities of teleportation (restricted to the material plane) and protection from breaking the laws of physics (being able to survive things such as temperatures below absolute zero, or the spaghettification process when reaching the center of a black hole or mass distortion when going over the speed of light). Currently located in Ganymede, beside the corpse of Victor Oliver West. Note that immunity to such events does not imply in ignoring its consequences.

Hostile Entities

- Twin Antennae

This entity is a relatively known cryptid on the online conspiracy forums, its first sighting being on the north of the Hundred Waves Coast, and its current whereabouts are unknown. They are amphibian creatures, being able to survive outside of water, but mainly living in the aquatic environment, and are compose of two body masses connected by organic tubes and an external node, which then also extends in a single antenna with one eye. They work together to survive in a mutual relationship where one of the bodies stays dormant, and another one remains active, switching roles every other day. The bodies themselves have tentacles which they use for movement and feeding, along with the mouth-like cavity on their external node, which give them 2 main methods of nutrient ingestion, being internal and external digestion. If one of the bodies is removed, the other one can still live, and new bodies can be reattached to reconstitute their structures.

- Hand Creatures

This creature didn't get as much fame as the Twin Antennae, due to its even more hard to believe nature and even less evidences supporting its existence. It is a creature with the shape of a giant human hand, with eyes on the back of the palm and no forearms. Somehow, they were able to assimilate some human habits, for example, moving primarily by using the limbs that correspond to the index and medium fingers, in a similar way to human legs, and with the thumb and pinky working as arms. It can form colonies by joining themselves to each other and acquiring monstrous forms, being able to use patterns similar to "rock, paper, scissors".

- The Statues of Lamnert Graveyard

These entities are located in Dropflight's (the neighboring city to Compelvista) city graveyard, and created a local urban legend for it due to the anomalous characteristics they possess. Normally, they are common statues, with no visible particularities, with religious iconography at most (saints, angels, nuns, crosses), however if the date in the calendar shows a day above the number 27, the entities seem to gain sentience. The behavior of the creatures, when active, consists in moving at varied velocities when not observed. The method which they use to move is unknown, and many attempts at capturing said movement ended up with the material corrupted or distorted. When a target is set, they adopt an "entrapment" strategy, trying to get as close as possible of the target, and looking to block any possible exits, and only that is apparently necessary because, for some still undiscovered reason, when approaching it, the target starts to show signs of poisoning, which worsens the more time it spends close to the entities, until it eventually succumbs, the poisoning continuing even after death, decomposing the body, until it's completely gone. It is speculated that a total of 400 people became victims to these entities, since after their disappearances, in some cases, some organic residue could be found with matches to the victims', in places near to the graveyard. It is speculated that the reason for this behavior being presented is the relations the place has to the dates of death of the firstborn and the youngest child from the couple formed by Dorgiel Flighter and Marie Lamnert, the former being part of the family tree of the city's founder, and the latter, the founder of the graveyard and the city's public garden. The firstborn died in a 27th, and the youngest, on a 35th, according to their hospital's death certificates.

- Radiant Resting, Room 409

Localized on the suburban area of Compelvista, a short walk of the Golden Oasis Shopping Center, the 3-flower hotel Radiant Resting boasts it's 7 floors, with 8 rooms each. The hotel is great for visitors from home and overseas alike, with its deluxe brutalist architecture, its typical appeal for tourists and the convenience of its close placement to the shopping center being great positives, although countered by their "distinct" prices. Usually operating in a 24h fashion with the most luxurious room service in the whole city, the hotel is plagued with an anomaly in its structure, that takes the form of one of its rooms on the 4th floor, room 409. The entity that resides in this room consists of a multidimensional structure-like parasite, that infects buildings and slowly substitutes it, with its final stage being a target structure's copy, spatially connected to a kind of hivemind in an undetermined size liminal space. A secondary characteristic of the parasite consists in consuming the target structure with vines and plants until they reach a ruin-like state. These plants are active and can be hostile to humans, despite not being very strong. The place can also consciously change its formation as a tactic to confuse invaders and remove any escape routes. In the hotel's case, this specific iteration of the entity had a stunted development, becoming completely unable to expand beyond room 409, and creating a replica of the bathroom of room 404 as a facade, leading to guests thinking that the room was only an employee bathroom, no longer in use, and avoiding further investigation. Its door is identical to the other ones on the floor, with the only difference being its number, 409, the only of the kind in all of the building. The plants inside are the main method of propagation, sticking the spores on clothing or skin of invaders that later detach in other places. The room 409 iteration, though, cannot produce spores, as its biology was permanently altered after absorbing a currently unknown anomaly, which eventually would evolve to become the Fly of the Grayed Flowers, which left the place and began living as a nomad.

- Dropflight's "The Beefshop!" Lamp Switch

This entity consists of a lamp, a mere incandescent lamp, installed in the ceiling of the kitchen freezer of one of the restaurants of the fast food chain "The Beefshop!", very famous throughout Loftanima and known for its iconic hamburger meat blends such as the "Amoolyte". Its anomaly consists of the light it emits, composed of waves in unknown frequencies and anomalous properties, but that have no effect when outside of its trigger condition. The branch is located north of Dropflight, operating until midnight, except on sundays, and the fry cook for the branch, Hugo Balaia, is an unpaid intern that used to get bored a lot during his shifts and, consequentially, played a lot with the work tools. In one of his shenanigans, he started to flicker the light switch constantly, while accidentally forgot to keep the freezer door open, locking himself inside and making the place completely dark. He did not know that complete darkness was the entity's trigger condition, and by, still, playing with the light switch 10 more times, the anomaly took place, creating from the altered photons, a copy of Hugo. This copy had every feature, memories and cognition of the original body, however, they do have a different molecular composition, with high amounts of sugar and muscular proteins, therefore being stronger, and with an extremely quicker metabolism, on top of showing exclusive alimentary preference to the meat of the original or former body, with reduced nutritional factors if they are introduced by different sources and, consequentially, suffering worse effects if foreign substances are introduced. With that, a cycle was started, where the doppelganger killed its original body, escaped the freezer by destroying its wall and, later, utilized Hugo as a means of sustenance, taking his place on the branch and selling his meat to the clients. Eventually, he ran out of stock, and while planning on getting additional help for his operations, the doppelganger summoned a second copy, not realizing that that would cause a dispute where the first one would end up being killed, and the second one would take its place. The current Hugo is his eighteenth version of the clone, which survived 3 previous fights (against the nineteenth, twentieth and twenty first versions), considerably refilling his stock.

- The Jack of Eyes (Batch Code 131.131.119)

This entity consists of a card of a card deck, representing the Jack, as if in a common deck of cards, however, the suit of this specific card is shown as the nonexistent suit of Eyes, with an open eye symbol where others like Hearts or Diamonds would be. The Jack itself also has a different appearance from common sets, being shown with an apparently marine type of background on the bottom half, and a sky with clouds on the top half. The figure in the center has a distinct aesthetic, not having any hats, or a face, with its head only having many black dots, probably alluding to holes, and on its neck, a collar made of sushi rolls is shown. The color of the suit's numbers and symbols is also different, being yellowish in color. Its origin and context are completely unknown, except for what's written on the back of the card, saying: "Bat: 131.131.119". This information can lead to believe that this was the batch code for this product, further speculating a possible whole deck in some package, somewhere. When this card is picked up, the one who picked it is marked by its corresponding anomaly, with no warning. While the card is in possession, the anomaly suddenly appears, in an unknown matter, somewhere close. This anomaly is composed of an element in the shape of an AV-8B Harrier military jet plane, but instead of a pilot seat in its cockpit, a humanoid torso is attached to the rest of the creature. This torso has a biomechanic appearance, but with the upper part being completely organic, with a faceless head, with a lot of holes on it instead. The torso also appears to be using a headset, with its headphone parts having the form of sushi rolls, and the microphone having the appearance of a transversely skewered nigiri sushi. When it has its sights on the target (the one with the card on their hand) the creature becomes hostile and assigns itself the mission to destroy it at any cost. It doesn't appear to have any personal motivations, only focusing on destroying anyone who has the card, and disappearing when it's being owned by no one. After kill confirmation, it leaves, disappearing and leaving no traces.

- The Green Constellation

This entity has no defined location and therefore, can never truly be mapped in a consistent, definite manner, and because it doesn't have a physical structuring, composing only of a phenomenon, it can occur in any galaxy supercluster of the entire universe. The entity known as the "Green Constellation" reveals itself when the formation of some stars, parts of a constellation or not are, in an unknown way, but apparently showing a type of "acquired conscience", reposition themselves in a horizontally and vertically symmetrical manner for the observer, like an asterisk. With this formation, the light they projects takes on a greenish coloring in an impossibly quick fashion, like they are being waken up. Contact with that energy by any sentient living being causes collateral effects described by witnesses as an "immensely deep sleep", and a consequent "manifestation of the individual's pleasantest dreams". After waking up from it, the victims start to present health improvements, with posterior contact increasing the intensity of said effects. As it progress further, the influence of the entity over the victims gets stronger and some changes occur, namely: Secretion and manipulation of a luminous green energy, allegedly linked to the entity's light and possibly being used to convert more members; A constant belief that the astral bodies in space are actually souls, and a subsequent solipsistic "protagonist" feeling, of being "chosen by God" and similar lines of thought; Suicidal tendencies, supposedly caused by the nameless entity, on the victims' dreams and, lastly, an unexplained emission of radioactive toxicity from the individuals' bodies, not affecting them negatively, but being noxious to any who approach them and aren't radioactive themselves. Most of its intel is based around its sightings and its effects on observers, many of which, on earth, became members of a cult which reveres these effects as the work of a nameless divine entity. This highly religious aspect diminishes the entity's credibility on the online forums due to it creating infamous comparisons to cults about extraterrestrial entities, something that, even in the Fifth Globe War timeline, has a pretty negative reputation and its only accepted by its most fierce followers or people who claim to have direct contact with the "Green Constellation".

- Skull of Wilhelm A. Soënder (Battle in 1939)

This entity consists of a human skull, displayed in Dropflight's national museum, on the "Relics and Events of the Third Globe War" wing, in the section that's portraying the final periods of the conflict. It's events were caused by the vehement refusal of the world on adopting the "Symmetry454" system's main calendar, ultimately leading to it's adoption anyways. Existing in the Post Fifth Globe War timeline, it belongs to the now to a soldier of extinct country named Perforides, serving the perforidian army division called the "Crashimes", Wilhelm A. Soënder. The skull is carved with writings and symbols of old perforidian dialect around its skull cap, speculated to be chants related to its anomalous property. It is activated when an individual establishes physical contact with the object for a period longer than 10 seconds, in which they start showing symptoms such as nausea, dizziness, weakness, sleepiness and audiovisual hallucinations, gradually increasing in intensity the more time passes. At the end of the 10 seconds, the individual, in an unknown manner, is teleported to what can be described as a recreation of the events of the last battle of the war, in a limited space, confined to the Great Square, completely destroyed at the time and littered with battle casualties from every party. In this space, Soënder presents slightly more exaggerated features than his real, deceased counterpart, with the former having the appearance of a 40-year-old, muscular General, weighing approximately 210lbs, 6' tall, and the latter having the profile of a 36-year-old, 160lbs, 5'1" tall. The reminiscent version of Soënder roams and scouts this eternal memory, repeatedly searching for Crashime survivors, with the hope of restoring his nation through extreme retaliation. Unfortunately, there is no known method of entering the recreation resembling Crashime personnel in any way, every living being who enters this realm being altered by it to have the appearance of enemies of Soënder, who will always adopt hostile behavior. It can be said, then, that whoever enters this place must be prepared to face extreme resistance.

- The "Shadow Dance"

Located inside the Foundational Space, the double entity known as the "Shadow Dance" consists of two humanoid silhouette-shaped figures, one appearing to be of the male gender, and other of the female gender. Although not having any facial features, their outlines indicate they wear what appear to be fancy suits, with patterns and details that resemble 40s period type clothing. No explanation can be found for these patterns, and their movement coordination simulate varied styles of dances for all their actions, especially attacking. The energy they're appear to be made of is of similar composition of an Ontological Source's, possibly linking their origin to those beings, although this energy is coupled with a bigger energy pattern, which currently shows signs of corruption, and the nature of it is unknown (It is not clear if this corruption is a natural byproduct of the entity or if it was caused by external influence). As they are yet to be discovered in a provable manner, there is no known information about visible weaknesses or strategies for subjugation except for intuitively attempting to align one's movements with the "dance" to match it.

- Fake Abraxan Ghoti (Calamopleurus mimeae abraxas)

This mimic variant of the Babelian Ghoti presents features that are practically identical to the original specimen, with their main differences being reduced to their accent color details, that while on the original are white, in this one, they are purple, therefore, elements such as behavior, niche and organization are perfectly paralleled, but their effects are different in nature, being significantly more damaging and fatal to living beings than its counterpart, with theorized "ontological damage" (according to the really scarce sources of info by witnesses), with that scarcity possibly being the result of these damages. The online conspiracy forums' users contest the existence of the Fake Abraxan Ghoti due to said evident similarities, dismissing the creature as a cheap knockoff invention of other members, created with the goal of farming attention by copying other reports, and putting little effort into searching for a creature themselves. In truth, a lot of people who searched for this creature did encounter it, but they ended up confusing it for the Babelian variant, and suffered the consequences. Said effects include: The first, the gradual degradation of any type of communication means in a radius of approximately 656ft, with complete destruction in an average time of 3 hours, if the fish is stationary (relocation of the specimen away from the affected objects restore their functions to their original state in an average time of 30 minutes), and in the case of a living being, this effect is felt as the degradation of communication ability, locomotion and survival instincts with similar patterns to amnesia and brain function-altering illnesses, becoming irreversible and fatal after the 3 hour period. The second one, also activated upon consumption of its meat, consists of a series of symptoms in quick succession: 10 minutes of hallucinations and distortions in the individual's

- Seinokaze (The “Ghost Blood” Village)

The resident entity of the Seinokaze village, founded 1600 years ago and localized in the territory belonging to the Doikijinese embassy in Dropflight, in the Fifth Globe War timeline, consists of an airborne transmissible virus, that can be spread through pure air, but usually utilizes stray organic cells as catalysts. Currently having contaminated all of the village's inhabitants, keeping it permanently quarantined by the adjacent villages and cities, and consequently isolating it from the world, the virus' anomalous property is inherently linked to its existence, leading to all of the contaminated beings to also be treated as anomalies and being extremely recommended to non-infected being extreme distance from all possible means of transmission, and any opportunities for so to be immediately and discretely terminated. Its anomalous property consists of an unknown modification of its composition, of ontological style, which allows for the conscience of the affected to be “transferred”, through unknown methods, to every single blood cell of their body, overriding the importance of a nervous system and of its respective organs and nerves into these cells, and allowing them to behave as a kind of “hivemind”, where all of them are organized, aligned and “thinking” in the same way as the original body would. When inside a contaminated body, no visible alterations can be seen, as the contamination is asymptomatic in nature, however, when expelled from the body through deep cuts, dismemberment, draining or another method, the blood cells can be voluntarily separated from the blood plasma as per the command of the affected's conscience, acquiring a malleable, smoke and flour-like consistency, able to either freely move, regenerate the wound and come back to the original body or fully leave and enter another susceptible body, alive or not. Healthy cells from another individual, if contaminated with cells with the virus, result in the individual having his conscience overwritten with the original host's, but if said host's cells are destroyed, the host's conscience is also destroyed, with the virus, however, remaining in its basic state. The virus itself can only be destroyed through extreme temperatures (4532°F or more). The village, when faced with the entity, assimilated its properties into their culture, building a cult following around it, and basing their lifestyle around the god that was responsible for the gift of the “Winds of Life”. With an idol they created using a transmission supercatalyst, composed of a decorated glass pot with a mix of the contaminated air with stem cells of people of the first generation of the village, kept in constant circular movement to avoid stagnation, the inhabitants lead the normal lifestyle of a common village, disposing of houses, temples, stores and dojos. The main use they have for the virus is the systematic transferring of their conscience into new generation bodies, considered by them as a “resurrection”, however, successive resurrections ended up gradually altering the structure of their bodies, with the current inhabitants having severe deformities akin to abominations. Objects can also “store” the conscience of the resurrected, provided they have an organic composition, therefore, some of them, when facing death, decide to resuscitate, for example, as their own houses if they're made of wood, or table idols, or other types of animals or plants, according either to the will of the affected, or the village's necessities.

later unwillingly bringing it to the hotel room. When trying to absorb the memories of one of its plants, it ended up being absorbed instead, leading to a battle of organisms and almost rending and destroying the section connected to the parasite and consequently removing its ability to spread. After winning, the fly's body was rebuilt with the shape of a plant-dog (based on one of the parasite's victims. The plants had a grayish color, tying around the dog's body like tapes, and its left eye was replaced with a gray flower), and promptly escaped the place, further living in a nomad manner and wandering through Loftanima. The specimen acquired the abilities of: Controlling the plants in its body, being able to also alter it at will; Transferring its conscience and soul to new bodies through spore flowers that it can organically produce in its body given proper time, and if ingested by the target body; An evolved form of its original ability, now being able to copy the memories of its target. - [Entity With a Name That Is Composed of 5 Random Letters]

The final entity of the campaign, and one of the possible culprits for the weirdness and chaos that permeate this universe. This entity has properties beyond the comprehensible, of divine level or even bigger. This entity has no form that can be understood by a material being, and can hardly be understood in spiritual or ideal contexts, for it represents every single form in every possible and impossible context. The most elemental of what it could be considered "ontological". This entity has no specific name, for no name truly represents a concept that could be attributed to a "call" for it, and at the same time, every single name represents it perfectly, therefore, any 5 random letters could be considered a name for it. (If you want to make things funnier, try rolling a d5 each turn for a new name!), making it impossible to be documented in a definite manner. Found in the Nexus, the "heart of the Foundational Space" (or it maybe could be said that it IS the Nexus?), there is no definite manner to reach it by any H9P character until now, but on a meta level, the creator deemed that to reach it, your character needs to reach level -10, while on the Foundational Space. It cannot be de facto "defeated", for its existence is inherent to existence and nonexistence themselves, so "killing it", "defeating it" or "ceasing its existence" have little to no effects, at maximum being temporary setbacks, although it can be done, even if its moot to try. Its appearance is everchanging in a quantum style by the observer effect of all who witness it, with its best description being a fractalic distortion of any element related to its observer, therefore, having a different appearance to each observer. It is extremely powerful, being able to shape reality itself, but only showing hostility to those who are hostile to it. The objective this entity represents is a kind of "endpoint" for the campaign, being recommended for it to be used mainly as a "final boss", or as some manner to achieve your ultimate goal, because achieving it equals to finishing the story, so this creature should equal being its final step.

Definitions and Glossary

- RPG: The RPG, or Role-Playing Game ("Jogo de Assumir Papéis") is a ludic experience (a game) where naturally a story is built throughout sessions with a party. It's like a big book where you and your friends are the writers!
- Session: An RPG session ("sessão de RPG") it's how a "game" between the party members can be called, which consist, basically, in the chapter the story is going to be written on, and the members will interpret each character inside the established world.
- Campaign: (Campanha) That's how the GM's story is called, usually planned ahead (except in cases like YASP, hehe) and divided in sessions until conclusion! It can have the duration the GM wants and be shaped according to their will (As a story can have RP-only sessions, it can also have battle-only sessions or both) and party elements.
- Oneshot: A specific type of campaign that lasts only one chapter.
- Party: (Grupo) Is the group that is going to play a RPG campaign. A party needs at least 1 player, who's going to create and have a character, and a GM (except in solo campaigns, where one person acts as both).
- DM ou GM: The "Game Master" (Mestre do Jogo), as it is normally known, or "Dungeon Master" (the term originally used in "Dungeons and Dragons (Caverna do Dragão)", one of the pioneers and the main, most important RPG in the world), is an equivalent to a God in the story. They're the one responsible for utilizing the system to build aspects of the world the campaign is going to be set in, such as story, places, NPCs, atmosphere etc, and guide the players and their respective characters through them.
- NPC: The "Non-Playable Character" (Personagem Não Jogável), is a character who cannot be controlled by the players. In videogames, these characters are controlled by algorithms, and in RPGs, they are usually controlled by the GM, when present in the plot. They can vary from being auxiliary chars to the story, to secondaries, or can be enemies, with the goal of standing in the way of the protagonists' stories. In this system, they're called "Entities".
- Story: (História) Basically, the story is what is going to be told during the campaign, and all the needed information to allow the characters to RP between themselves or the world. It's sectioned into two parts: "Lore*", which is the type of story that's used to expand the world and it's concepts, such as past events, important places, "backstories" (stories created to explain the origin of said places and events); And "Plot*", which is what happens in the present, the story that progresses as the session goes on, what the players are doing in the moment while searching for the campaign's main goal.
- Goal: (Objetivo) The characters' main objective. The reason they're on their stories. The way to finish the game. In this system, it is called "Destination". Usually established through RP or explained in the sheet and then presented to the party members in the first session.
- RP: The "acting" that the players do as their characters. A core part of character development is represented by this. As the two first letters of "RPG", this characteristic is the ability of the player to relate to its character, whether in or out of battle turns (with restrictions when inside them), and follow their vision.
- Turn: (Turno) It's a persons "time" to act during the campaign, where they can or can't, act in a free or restrict manner, however the context needs it. During RPs, turns are more flexible, usually being defined by the proposed situation or by the characters' freedom to act, however, when in Battle Turns, actions become more restricted to initiative, the character's abilities in their sheets and/or by random Dice values.
- Dice: (Dado) The foundational mechanic to every RPG, this tool is responsible for allowing the party to tap the realm of the random, which is the best balancing system nature could produce. This element of unpredictability helps in moments of conflict or challenges the characters will face, to decide their capacity to continue the story, and how to continue, making everything more fun in the process. Due to our current technology, we can have dice with uncountable sides (d100, d200, d450, thanks dice bots), including even d2 (coin toss) and d1 (because I said so), but physical dice sets usually come with the following values: d4, d6, d8, d12, d20 (the fan favorite) and d100 (with one die for the tens and one die for the units). Their behavior can be affected by Modifiers.
- Initiative: (Initiative) A mechanic that's used to define the characters' order of turns. Can be previously defined or randomly sorted through dice roll comparison.
- Modifiers: (Modificador) A value or given attribute which can alter the target character or target situation. Can be arbitrary, by being defined in character sheets; situational, by being activated during the required situation or conditional, after something is done (positively or negatively) and can vary from an added or subtracted value to your dice roll (ex: $d20 + 10$, $d20 - 2$) to an altered number of type of dice used (ex: $2d10$, $2d100 + 4d6$).

- Character and Character Sheet (PC): (Personagem e Folha de Personagem) The document where you create your char! The piece of paper that's going to bring your Playable Character (Personagem Jogável) to life! The character you play, your "self" in the system's world! And this "self" is the persona you control in it. It's where you put all the relevant information to your character, such as appearance, equipment, story, abilities, values, HP, everything! These infos are necessary and considered in tests, and can be paramount in defining a success or a failure.
- Classes: A quite common concept in RPGs, it is a method of sectioning the diverse types of characters based on their developed abilities in the field they act in (ex: Fighter, Rogue, Thief, Archer, Knight). As mentioned in the "Customization" section, this is not a concept that H9P aims to use, due to its premise of allowing for "Custom Classes" to be made through Essence and its many possible manipulations.
- Tests: (Testes) The main methods of measuring the conflict between player and world. Be it an ability check, a luck check or a combat-type check, these tests define the winner. All known systems use the comparing of two values of dice rolls as the standard method for realizing any test, however, in this system, it is not the only one, because it allows the use of any other methods of solving an issue (should they be at least interesting and/or challenging), with or without the former, since they can be either defined by the GM, proposed by players or implemented through agreements in the party.
- Bufs and Debufs/Nerfs: Buff is how it's called an acquired advantage for an object, technique, attack etc that leaves the affected target in a better state than the previous. In counterpart, Debufs or Nerfs is the opposite effect, where a disadvantage is applied, leaving the target in a worse state.
- Criticals: (Críticos) The many possible values that can be rolled in the dices are limited to their extremes. In other words, the roll of a d20 can only result in numbers between 1 and 20, said 1 and 20 being the lower and upper limit respectively, which are considered in RPGs as "Criticals", and are attributed to their respective situations. That's why, if the roll's value is 1, this can be considered a "Critical Failure", and if it's 20, it's a "Critical Success". When one of these happen, their characteristics are dramatically heightened to emphasize the consequence, for the absolute best or worst.
- Slots: (Encaixe) The little "Spaces" where every element is written in.
- Meta-Game: "Meta-Gaming" (Meta-Jogo), which possesses such name because of the use of meta linguistics in the game environment, is a gaming practice which consists in the use of elements outside of the campaign or the system to influence the events inside (story, values etc). An example of said practice is a character knowing the weak spot of a Boss because the controlling player has played using the system or the campaign before, even though the character has never found or even heard about said Boss. It is highly frowned upon by the RPG community and, even though it is possible to be realized in H9P through mechanics like the "Supreme Hyperversal Fluke" or the "Miracles", it is highly recommended to use with thorough moderation.
- Caps (Soft Cap and Hard Cap): "Cap" (Tampa), is a term used in games to define an upper limit, a "ceiling", of until which point the values of an element can reach.
- Roll: In portuguese, "Rolar".
- Skip: In portuguese, "Pular". Can also refer to skipping your turn.
- Worldbuilding: (Construção de Mundo) Refers to the manner in which the world is developed and used to establish itself around the story and its characters.
- Storytelling: (Contar Histórias), Refers to the way stories are told.
- Canon: The "Canon" (Cânone) basically consists in a set of stories and tales considered official to the community where they exist to maintain coherence in the works' universes, differentiating them from fan works, parodies, fan fictions etc. Originally a religious term, there is indeed the term "Bible Canon", where the canonized saints are officially part of Christianity, the most popular religion in the world. Another example is the Canon of games like Undertale, where the only events considered official and true to story are the ones that happen in its main installment and in its sequel, Deltarune, disregarding works like fanfics, alternate universes, mods or retellings.

*Bit of trivia, in brazilian portuguese, the words for "Folk" and "Lore" were adapted into the language to become what is commonly known as "Folclore", a literal juxtaposition of them to represent the more mysterious parts of the mythology.

These next definitions are from elements that are general to RPG systems, but are adapted in more specific ways in H9P.

- HP: "Health Points" (Pontos de Saúde) are the points that determine the health of you character. While they are above 0, your character will remain alive. If they do drop to 0 or even below 0, your character dies. This mechanic was adapted into the concepts of "Essence" and "Composition Status".

- MP: "Mana Points", "Magic Points" (Pontos de Mágica), are the points that determine the capacity of a character to use an ability that costs magic or a similar attribute in a system. The measuring is the same as HP, but the only thing affected is your "magic". For being a similar concept, it can be said that this mechanic is also adapted into the concept of "Composition Status".
- XP: "Experience Points" (Pontos de Experiência) are the award you get in an inherent manner by progressing in the campaign. They are useful to evolve different aspects of your character. Can also be divided in categories like "Skill Points" and "Equipment Points" etc. and, in this system, they are adapted into the concept of "PRp (Property Points), GRp (Gear Points) e ABp (Ability Points)".
- Attributes: (Atributos) Are the main characteristics of your character, established and measured in their creation, which define their fields of actions (ex: Strength, Dexterity, Intelligence). This mechanic was adapted into the concepts of "Properties".
- Skills: (Habilidades) Are competences that the character can realize, and a direct result of their investments in each respective attribute. This mechanic was adapted to the concept of "Abilities".
- Equipment: (Equipamento) Are all items that can directly affect a character's status in or outside battle, like armor, weapons, decoration and other types of items. This mechanic was adapted into the concept of "Gear".
- Items: (Itens) Objects that may or may not be equippable and stay under the character's possession in their inventory.
- Inventory: (Inventory) Place where items are stored, be it on a character or in an object or in a place.
- Enemies: (Inimigos) Are NPCs created with the goal to oppose and antagonize the protagonists journey, named in this system as "Hostile Entities".
- Difficulty: (Dificuldade) Is a difficulty indicator in context where it's applied, with that context being easier when the indicator is low, and harder when it's high. It's pretty intuitive to understand. This mechanic was adapted into the concept of the "Toughness Indicator (TI)".

These last definitions are of terms specific to Hyperverse Plurivalency.

- Essence Link: (Vínculo de Essência) Where Essence is currently localized.
- Essence/Property Link: (Vínculo entre Propriedade/Essência) Both are connected, and from Level 3 and Up, it is possible to tear this link without destroying the Essence.
- Gear Link: (Vínculo de Apresto) Same as Essence Link.
- Ult: Also known as the "Ultimate" or the "Ultimate Attack", Ults are the strongest and most emblematic attacks of your character, being used for the most diverse needs, such as trying to turn the tables in the game, neutralizing an enemy or finishing a battle in style.
- Drive: (Impulso) The main charge energy to launch Ults (except Miracles). Accumulated as Challenges are concluded.
- Aider Boost: (Estímulo Auxiliador) Consists of percentual bonuses given to abilities during their creation and of their respective Gear. They vary from +50% to -50%, and are decided through a d8. There is also a change of losing your Ability if a Critical Failure is rolled.
- Ø: Symbol that's utilized to represent a block or removal of any aspect of the system via gameplay.
